Glasgow a City Without Graft.
Here was a town council without corruption—at least we would judge at such irregularities as disturb the Glasgowians—a council which knows no party politics and elected a conservator to succeed a liberal as last proved without a change in its political complexion. Here, too, was a city which knows no boss but itself; which takes the most liberal as well as the most conservative as its motto; which is so far from keeping its officials in office as long as they will stay or as long as they serve the convictions of their constituents; a city which makes its enterprises pay, and pay big, and watches its finances as prudently as the most conservative banking house; a city in which it is the ambition of every citizen to serve without pay and without return save in the approval of his fellow citizens. Here, too, is a city which knows no favor; no favoritism; no politics in the choice of its servants. "Wanted, a town clerk. The compensation of Glasgow," in the newspaper advertisement cuts "involves applications for the office of town clerk, which is about to become vacant. The salary will be $18,000 a year." Here was the most important official office within the gift of the council, an office which combines the duties of the city auditor as well as the clerical duties of the city, hunting for the man, such as a German city looks for a lord mayor, or an American village or church searches for a parson or a minister.

Glasgow a City Without Graft.
Here was a town council without corruption—at least we would judge at such irregularities as disturb the Glasgowians—a council which knows no party politics and elected a conservator to succeed a liberal as last proved without a change in its political complexion. Here, too, was a city which knows no boss but itself; which takes the most liberal as well as the most conservative as its motto; which is so far from keeping its officials in office as long as they will stay or as long as they serve the convictions of their constituents; a city which makes its enterprises pay, and pay big, and watches its finances as prudently as the most conservative banking house; a city in which it is the ambition of every citizen to serve without pay and without return save in the approval of his fellow citizens. Here, too, is a city which knows no favor; no favoritism; no politics in the choice of its servants. "Wanted, a town clerk. The compensation of Glasgow," in the newspaper advertisement cuts "involves applications for the office of town clerk, which is about to become vacant. The salary will be $18,000 a year." Here was the most important official office within the gift of the council, an office which combines the duties of the city auditor as well as the clerical duties of the city, hunting for the man, such as a German city looks for a lord mayor, or an American village or church searches for a parson or a minister.
